How to bypass lock screen on an android phone. How do you bypass lock screen on android. How to bypass the screen lock on android. Can you bypass pattern lock on android. How to bypass lock screen on samsung.

Samsung Galaxy S10+ (Image credit: Andrew Martonik / Android Central) There are certain aspects of our phone that we've come to expect. The home screen is a customizable canvas that we can add apps and widgets to, the app drawer houses all of the applications that are downloaded, and the lock screen shows the time and notifications without giving you full access to the rest of your phone. The lock screen is a great way to stay informed about messages, calls, emails, etc., while also adding a helpful layer of security to your device. However, if you don't care about the lock screen and find it does nothing more than slow you down, it is possible to disable it. We'll talk more about whether or not this is a good idea below, but first thing's first, here's what the process for disabling the lock screen on Android looks like. Open the Settings on your phone. Tap Security. Tap Screen lock. Source: Joe Maring / Android Central Enter your PIN/password. Tap None. Tap Yes, remove. Source: Joe Maring / Android Central Now, any time you wake up your Android phone, you'll instantly be taken to the home screen. Similarly, if you ever find yourself wanting to re-enable the lock screen, just follow the above steps again and choose whether you want to lock your phone with a Swipe, Pattern, PIN, or Password. Source: Android Central (Image credit: Source: Android Central) As you can see, disabling the lock screen on your Android phone is a pretty easy task. However, since this is removing an important level of security from your device, is it something you should do? That all comes down on you to decide. Anytime you make something less secure, you are technically making it more vulnerable to being tampered with. If someone snatches your phone and there's no lock screen to protect it, they have instant access to all of your apps, contacts, and other personal information. From that perspective, it probably makes sense for most people to leave their lock screen enabled. Even if it's just a four-digit PIN that's easy for you to remember, something is better than nothing at all. At the same time, if you really don't like the lock screen and place a lot of value on getting to your home screen as quickly as possible, you're more than welcome to disable it. So long as you're aware that doing this makes your phone less secure, being booted right to the home screen when you press the power button is pretty cool. Fingerprint sensors and face unlock systems have helped to speed up the act of getting past the lock screen, so also keep that in mind before totally removing it. Why you (and your family) should be using two-factor authentication and a password manager Just because your iPhone is locked with a passcode or Touch ID doesn't mean it's safe from prying eyes and fingers. From text message notifications to Siri, your phone's lock screen is brimming with alerts, features, and settings that anyone can tamper with, even after you've locked your handset. Luckily, iOS has plenty of settings that can help lock down your phone's lock screen. For example, you can keep sensitive notifications hidden, disable controls that could put your lost phone in airplane mode, turn off lock-screen access to Siri, and more. Turn off lock screen notifications You'd probably never dream of letting a stranger rifle through your text messages and email inbox, but that's what could happen if you allow apps like Messages and Mail to put alerts on your iPhone's lock screen. It's even possible to reply to a text message or trash a mail message directly from the notification, even if your iPhone is locked. Ben Patterson / IDG If you don't want your latest text messages showing up on your iPhone's lock screen, make sure to disable lock screen alerts for the Messages app. If you're worried about the wrong people seeing notifications from Messages, Mail, and other applications on your iPhone's lock screen, consider turning off lock screen notifications for your most sensitive apps. Tap Settings > Notifications to see a (probably massive) list of app the apps installed on your iOS device. Tap an app, then switch off the Show on Lock Screen setting to keep the app's notifications from appearing on your lock screen. Unfortunately, there's no way to turn off all lock screen notifications at once. Swipe from left to right on your locked iPhone screen, and you—or anyone else who's got your device—can see your Today widgets. That means, depending on the widgets you've installed, they could check your calendar, peek at your Mail inbox, speed dial your favorite contacts, and more. Some apps are sensitive about what they show when your iPhone is locked—Activity, for example, and Find My Friends, won't show anything in their widgets until you unlock the phone. Ben Patterson / IDG Your widgets will be accessible to anyone who has your iPhone until you turn off lock screen access for the Today View. Also, if you swipe down from the top of the Today view, you'll see a running tally of all your lock screen notifications, neatly organized by date. Essentially, it's a history of your important app activity for the past week, all there for anyone to see. If you don't want just anyone to be able to view your agenda in the Today view or past app alerts in Notifications, you can tap Settings > Touch ID & Passcode, scroll down to the Allow Access When Locked section, then uncheck the Today View and Notifications View settings. Keep in mind that even with the Notifications View setting unchecked in the Allow Access When Locked section, individual lock-screen notifications for your apps will still appear on the lock screen, unless you disable them in the Notifications settings screen. You just won't be able to pull down the list of all your notifications. Turn off access to Control Center Flick up from the bottom of your iPhone's lock screen and you'll reveal Control Center, a panel of settings and controls that do everything from toggling your airplane and Do Not Disturb modes to setting timers and turning your iPhone's LED flash into a flashlight. Ben Patterson / IDG Don't want a thief to be able to put your stolen iPhone into airplane mode? Make sure to block access to the iOS Control Center from the lock screen. It's handy, but leaving Control Center enabled on your lock screen could allow an iPhone thief to put your stolen device into airplane mode, rendering your lost handset untraceable via Find My iPhone. If you don't want anyone messing with Control Center settings on your locked iPhone, tap Settings > Control Center, then turn off the Access on Lock Screen setting. Block access to Siri Siri can perform a surprising number of duties even when your iPhone is locked. For example, she can rattle off your agenda, schedule new meetings, create reminders, and even send text messages to contacts. Ben Patterson / IDG There's an easy way to keep Siri from chatting with strangers from the lock screen. While Siri won't perform sensitive tasks (such as reading your email) without a passcode, you can, if you wish, block access to Siri completely from the lock screen. Tap Settings > Siri, then uncheck the Access When Locked setting. Turn off Wallet access If you're an Apple Pay user, iOS will let you quickly access your stored credit cards from your iPhone lock screen by double-tapping the Home button. Ben Patterson / IDG Visit the Wallet & Apple Pay settings screen to keep your stored credit cards from popping up on your iPhone's lock screen. While you can't actually make a purchase without authenticating with Touch ID or a passcode, you may not want your Apple Pay cards so visible from the lock screen—or perhaps you're just tired of your credit cards popping up whenever you double-press the Home button by accident. To block lock screen access to your iOS Wallet, tap Settings > Wallet & Apple Pay, then uncheck the Double-Click Home Button setting. Your Wallet will still come up when you hover your phone over an Apple Pay terminal, or you can launch Wallet from its app or with Siri. Put your missing iPhone in "lost mode" Let's say you never got around to securing your iPhone's various lock screen features, and whoosh!—your iPhone vanishes from your pocket. If you act quickly, there's still a way to remotely lock down your iPhone. Ben Patterson / IDG iOS's "Lost Mode" lets you completely lock down the lock screen on your missing iPhone. The trick is engaging Find My iPhone's Lost Mode, which instantly silences all notifications, alarms, and rings from incoming phone calls. Control Center will also be disabled, and even the Camera shortcut—which can't be turned off by any other means—will shut down. To put your missing iPhone into Lost Mode, visit iCloud.com, click Find My iPhone, select your iPhone, then click the Lost Mode button. You can also turn on Lost Mode using the Find My iPhone app on another of your iOS devices. Note that Lost Mode will only work if your missing iPhone still has wireless access. If the thief who snatched your handset puts it into airplane mode, you'll be out of luck. Out of the box, the Android lock screen offers very little in the way of efficiency. With the help of a free third-party app, you can change that. Jack Wallen shows you how. Out of the box, the Android lock screen doesn't offer much, other than to prevent prying eyes from getting to your data and allowing you quick access to your phone or camera. What if you want more? Simple. You turn to a third-party app called Start. With Start, you can get access to everything you care about... apps, news, settings, and much more. This is truly a fantastic app that has plenty to offer nearly every type of user, including: Secure unlock Easy navigation Learns how you use your device (and helps you get what you want faster) Quick access to social networking Organize your "starters" how you like them Quick settings to things like Wi-Fi, Bluetooth, and more Notifications manager On top of all the features, Start also happens to be a very elegant solution to the lock screen. Let's get this installed and learn how to use it. Installation Installing Start is quite simple: Open the Google Play Store from your Android device Search for start Locate and tap the entry by Celltick Tap Install Read the permissions listing carefully If the permissions listing is acceptable, tap Accept Allow the installation to complete Now, you'll need to take care of a few configuration options. Initial configuration The first thing you need to do is actually launch Start. By default, it won't be running. So, find the launcher in the app drawer and give it a tap. Start will launch and reveal the default layout (Figure A). Figure A Start running on a Verizon-branded Droid Turbo. Next, tap and swipe left from the menu button in the top right corner (three horizontal lines). From there, tap Settings and scroll down until you see Default Launcher. Click it, tap the slider to enable Start as the default launcher, and then set Start as Home when prompted (Figure B). Figure B Setting Start as the default. Now, choose what launcher to use after unlock (Figure C). Figure C Setting the launcher to be used after unlocking the device. You're now ready to start using the new lock screen. At this point, you're ready to set up your Starters. To do this, slide the screen to the left and tap Settings. From here, tap Setup Starters. Go through the list of possible Starters (Figure D) and, when you find one you want to include on the Start screen, tap it and then tap the enable slider to add it. Figure D Adding Starters to the Start screen. To view a Starter, simply tap on it and slide it to the right. This will open a new screen that contains the data requested. Start is an outstanding way to get more from your lock screen. If you think that Android is lacking in this arena, you'd be hard-pressed to find a better solution. What would you add to the default Android lock screen? Let us know your opinion in the discussion thread below.
